Single Thread Can Spot Guilty

FBI's Laboratories Employ The Latest Devices for Crime Detection.

WASHINGTON — Conviction of hit-and-run drivers often hangs by a thread—literally.

Preserved glass fragments, paint scalings, pieces of broken metal, lumps of soil, hairs or threads may be the link needed to prove that a driver is guilty, the FBI says.

Such items may be picked up at the scene of an accident or found clinging to a fender, door hinge or other part of a suspect's automobile.

The FBI's well-equipped laboratories are available without charge to all the country's law enforcement agencies for chemical analysis of likely clues.

The FBI cited the following cases to illustrate the importance of even the smallest piece of evidence.

A man was struck down while walking at night along the shoulder of a road outside a large eastern city. In examining a suspect's car, officers found a thread stuck to the right front fender.

The Thread Matched.

The FBI laboratory found this thread to be of the same type as one removed from the victim's coat. Both had the same number of strands and were colored with the same kind of dye.

Because the courtroom testimony by both sides conflicted the testimony of the FBI technician assumed unusual importance. The driver was found guilty and received a six-month jail sentence and a fine of $200.

Large particles of soil collected at the scene of the accident helped locate a man who struck and killed a young girl on a rural highway in a western state. The collision dislodged the dirt accumulated under the fenders of his car. The owner of a damaged vehicle in a nearby town denied any knowledge of the accident.

Nevertheless, specimens of soil taken from the car were found by FBI experts to contain the same minerals as the particles gathered up near the girl. The man pleaded guilty when confronted with this evidence.

Interesting Case.

Another interesting case arose when a 11-year-old boy on a bicycle was struck by a car speeding through a small southern town. Police located a damaged car having brown and red markings on the front fender, apparently from paint on the bicycle.

The paint was carefully scraped off and sent to the FBI, which found that such was indeed the case.

Microscopic study revealed the paint in both specimens to be of two layers, one bright red and one brown. The driver was convicted and sentenced to 18 months at hard labor.

Glass fragments from headlights are invaluable in tracking down hit-and-run vehicles, the FBI said. Although few cars have been found hitting persons running under the cars may provide the necessary evidence.

The FBI recommended that articles to be analyzed be wrapped in clean white paper and shipped in pill boxes sealed with Scotch tape and carrying correct identification data on the outside.

Uncle Sam Says

Millions of you await your newspaper boy every day. He is important to you and to us. He is the citizen of tomorrow. He may be your home-town city, business man, engineer, engineer, manufacturer, and, perhaps, your President. 890,000 newspaper boys like Jimmy sold $2,825,850.50 in War Stamps and Bonds. Now that the war is over, Jimmy hasn't stopped buying saving stamps and bonds. I am proud of the way Jimmy backed the attack against our enemies—I am counting on the part of Jimmy now for backing his peace time.

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

TOM: "It's mighty nice to receive a compliment like you've just given us, Judge. We do take our responsibilities very seriously and try to do the right thing with everybody. In spite of it, we get criticized now and then."

OLD JUDGE: "I know . . . you've got to take the bitter with the sweet in times like these. Speaking of criticism, and I mean really unfair criticism, reminds me of the spirit beverage business."

FRANK: "How is that, Judge?"

OLD JUDGE: "Simply this . . . can think of any other business in which seller is responsible for what the buyer with his merchandise? If a person eat much cake and gets indigestion, the isn't blamed. Nor is the coffee merc criticized if someone drinks too much and can't sleep. But the seller of spirit erages gets blamed plenty if one of his tomers overindulges. Doesn't seem fair, does it, Tom?"

TOM: "Frankly, it doesn't. Judge, never looked at it that way before."

...BES SAFE DRIVING ...ER JULY FOURTH

...mond, Va., July 3.- Colonel ...an W. Woodson, Jr., Superintendent of State Police, today urged all persons who plan on using the highway over the Fourth of July holidays to drive and walk with consideration for other users of the highways.

"Take it easy on the Fourth and Live on the Fifth" Col. Woodson said, calling attention to the fact that traffic volumes in Virginia have already surpassed the peak and in that year twenty-one persons lost their lives over the Fourth of July holiday period, with eight persons meeting death on the Fourth alone.

World Fair Site London's Chore

Hyde Park, Scene of First Show in Crystal Palace In 1851, Is Barred.

LONDON — London's Hyde Park, in which the first International Exhibition was held in 1851, will not be the site of the great World's fair planned for 1951, the government has announced, mainly because it is London's largest "lung" and the buildings would ruin the park for at least three years, says the New York Times.

Large blitzed areas in the metropolis are being considered as alternatives, but selection of a site is perplexing the authorities as there is no vacant land large enough to concentrate what is designed to surpass any previous international event of the same character. There is talk of spreading the structures over bomb-wrecked areas on both sides of the Thames in the vicinity of Waterloo bridge.

The fair of a century ago was made memorable by the Crystal palace, then regarded as one of the wonders of the world. In it, exhibitors from more than 40 countries displayed their wares and inventions.

Proposes Crystal Palace.

Two hundred forty-five architectural plans, including one by the royal commission, of which the prince consort was honorary chairman were rejected when a farmer's son, Joseph Paxton, who had won renown as a landscape gardener, came forward with the proposal for the Crystal palace. He had designed the plans in nine days. The structure was completed in seven months. Joseph Paxton was rewarded with knighthood. Pessimists called the 600-yard-long glass palace fantastic and predicted that the monstrous "conservatory," as they dubbed it, would collapse before long under stress of wind and weather. Its purpose served, it was removed to the suburb of Sydenham, where it stood until fire destroyed it on November 30, 1935.

The exhibition was opened on a rainy morning on May 1, 1851, by Queen Victoria, who drove from Buckingham to Hyde Park, in which half a million of her subjects had assembled, as the palace were 25,000 invited guests and ticket holders. Of the event Victoria wrote that night in her diary:

"The great event has taken place, a glorious and touching sight, one which I shall ever be proud of for my beloved Albert and my country. God bless my dearest Albert. God bless my dearest country, which has shown itself so great today!"

Commission Still Exists.

During the 140 days it was open the exhibition was visited by more than 600,000 people, many coming from all narts of the world. A total of £336,000 was taken at the doors.

After meeting all liabilities the commissioners had a balance of £186,000. Out of it they helped to build the Kensington museums, the Royal Albert Hall and the Prince Albert Memorial and endowed valuable scholarships which continue to this day.

The Royal Commission for the exhibition of 1851 is still in existence. Its president is the Princess Royal. It has for its object the promotion of scientific and artistic education by means of funds derived from the Kensington estate which was purchased with the surplus funds of the exhibition.

As to the old Crystal palace, the winning design for the structure which is to replace it at Syndenham provides for a vast steel-framed, reinforced concrete structure. There will be a main entrance hall, an amphitheater for opera and ballet, a small theater, concert hall and dance hall. A sports stadium will seat 100,000 persons, and there will be a swimming pool and an ice hockey and skating rink. Estimated to cost $60,000,000, the project may be completed in five or six years, architects say.

How women and girls may get wanted relief from functional periodic pain
Cardui is a liquid medicine which many women say has brought relief from the strange-like agony and nervousness of functional periodic distress. Here's how it may help:
1 Taken like a tonic, Cardui should stimulate appetite, aid digestion." Thus help build resistance for the "times" to come.
2 Started 3 days before your time," it should help relieve pain due to purely functional periodic causes.
Try Cardui. If it helps, you'll be glad you did. Use as directed.
